The through-line

Every video on this list argues one thing from a different direction:

Proposals are the slowest way to get hired on Upwork. Invites and DMs are the fastest, and you can engineer them.

That's the claim. You are one of very few people who can back it with 113 hires and 3,000+ hours. Everything below is a proof of that claim, a story that earns the right to make it, or a tactic that follows from it.

Assets you must gather before filming anything:

- ☐ Screen recording of your live Upwork profile (Top Rated Plus badge visible)
- ☐ Screenshot of the July 2023 profile — $30 earnings, Rising Talent badge
- ☐ Your invite inbox, scrolled — the volume is the argument
- ☐ The $300 client's messages (blur name/avatar)
- ☐ Your Connects purchase history
- ☐ Earnings graph, all-time
- ☐ 3-5 student before/after, with their permission in writing

Anywhere you see [FILL: ...] below, drop in your real number. Never approximate on camera — the specificity is the whole product.

Packaging rules (apply to all 10)

1. A number lives in the title or the thumbnail. Always. 113, 3,000, $30, $700, $200. That's the asset no competitor can copy.
 2. Sentence case, never all-caps. All-caps reads as spam to a cold viewer.
 3. Thumbnail text: 3-4 words max, readable at 120px wide. Test it by shrinking it on your phone until it's thumbnail-sized. If you can't read it, rewrite it.
 4. Your face is in 7 of the 10. You are the credential. Faceless doesn't work for an authority niche.
 5. Colour system — pick it once and never change it: Upwork green (#14A800) as the accent, near-black background, white text, one red element reserved only for negative/warning thumbnails (#1, #6). Consistency is how people spot you in the feed.
 6. No question-mark titles. "Are Boosted Proposals Worth It?" underperforms "Boosted Proposals Are Eating Your Connects." Make the claim.

1. The $300 client who never paid

Source post: the $300 non-payment + laughing emoji + racial slur — your confirmed biggest post at 63.6K views.

The angle

Do not make this a complaint video. Complaint videos get sympathy and no subscribers. Make it a protection system video with a story as the cold open.

The real insight — and the reason it earned 63.6K — isn't "a client scammed me." It's that Upwork's protections work completely differently on hourly vs fixed-price contracts, and almost no freelancer understands the difference until it costs them. You lost $300 learning it. That's the trade you're offering the viewer: my $300 for your 10 minutes.

The emotional spike is the laughing emoji. The value is everything after it.

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	A client refused to pay me $300 — and Upwork did nothing	Lead with this
B	I lost $300 on Upwork because I didn't know this one rule	Swap in if CTR < 4%
C	The Upwork scam that still works in 2026	Broadest reach, least "you"

Thumbnail

The blurred message with a visible laughing emoji does all the work. Red $300 is the only red on your channel besides #6 — it should feel like an alarm.

Hook (0:00-0:20)

He accepted the work. The files were delivered, he told me it was perfect — and then he sent me a message with a laughing emoji saying he would never pay me. Three hundred dollars, gone. I reported it to Upwork and nothing happened. Nothing. And the worst part is that it was my own fault, because I didn't understand one setting on the contract — the same setting most of you have wrong right now.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	Cold open — the story, told fast, no channel intro
0:20	Turn: "this is not a complaint video, it's the system I built after"
0:45	The receipts — show the messages, blurred
1:30	Why Upwork couldn't help me — fixed-price vs hourly protection, explained properly
4:00	Rule 1: milestones, funded before you touch the file
5:30	Rule 2: what "accepted" actually means and when the clock starts
7:00	Rule 3: the client-side red flags I now refuse to ignore [FILL: your 3]
8:30	What I'd do differently — dispute process, realistically
9:30	CTA + link to #3

Handling the slur

The original post quoted a racial slur. Keep it out of the title, thumbnail, and first 30 seconds. On camera, say: "and he ended it with a racial slur I'm not going to repeat." Same punch, and you stay advertiser-friendly on a video that will get your widest reach.

Shorts to cut

1. The story, 45 seconds, ending on "and Upwork did nothing"
2. Fixed-price vs hourly protection in 30 seconds
3. "Three red flags I ignored" — rapid cuts

2. $30 to Top Rated Plus

Source post: the July 2023 profile — $30 total earnings, Rising Talent badge, "IT IS POSSIBLE."

The angle

This is your channel trailer disguised as a video. It's the one that converts a stranger into a subscriber, so it must do one job above all others: prove the transformation is real and recent.

The trap is making it a motivational speech. Nobody subscribes to motivation. Structure it instead as a teardown of your own old profile — pull up the 2023 screenshot and be genuinely harsh about it. Every flaw you name is a flaw the viewer has right now. That's what makes it useful rather than self-congratulatory.

The strongest possible framing: "I'm going to critique my own profile the way I'd critique yours, and it's going to be embarrassing."

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	My Upwork profile in 2023 vs now — 113 jobs later	Lead with this
B	I made $30 on Upwork in my first year. Here's what changed.	More vulnerable, good for browse
C	Roasting my own Upwork profile from 2023	Highest CTR potential, lowest search value

Thumbnail

Split-screen with a hard vertical divider. Left desaturated, right in full colour. $30 in white, 113 JOBS in Upwork green.

Hook (0:00-0:20)

This is my Upwork profile in July 2023. Thirty dollars in total earnings. A Rising Talent badge that nobody respected, a title I copied from someone else, and a portfolio with three pieces in it. This is the same profile today [reveal]. Same person, same country, same skill. I'm going to show you every single thing that changed between those two screenshots — and I'm going to be harsh about the old one, because you probably have the same profile right now.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	Cold open — the two screenshots, side by side
0:40	The rule: I change one thing at a time so you can see what each is worth
1:00	Teardown 1 — the title. What mine said, why it was invisible in search
3:00	Teardown 2 — the overview. First two lines are the only ones that matter
5:00	Teardown 3 — the portfolio. Volume vs relevance
7:00	Teardown 4 — rate. What I charged, what I should have charged [FILL]
9:00	Teardown 5 — specialised profiles, the thing almost nobody uses
11:00	The order I'd fix them in if I only had one afternoon
12:00	CTA → #3

Retention device

State up front: "the change that mattered most is number four, and it's the one everyone gets backwards." Then deliver it. Don't fake the payoff.

Shorts to cut

1. The two screenshots, 20 seconds, no talking — just the reveal
2. "Your Upwork title is why nobody sees you" — teardown 1, standalone
3. The first-two-lines rule from teardown 2

3. 113 jobs, mostly without proposals ★

FLAGSHIP — MAKE THIS FIRST

Source post: "I have been hired 113 times... most of these came through job invitations and direct messages."

The angle

This is the video the entire channel hangs on, and it's the one where your competition can't follow you. Every other Upwork channel teaches proposal writing, because proposal writing is what people search for. You're going to argue that proposals are the beginner trap and invites are the actual game — and then, crucially, show that invites are engineerable, not luck.

The mistake would be leaving it at "optimise your profile." Everyone says that. What you have that they don't is the mechanism: Upwork's search ranks freelancers, clients browse that ranking, and invites flow down it. So the work isn't writing better proposals — it's ranking. Reframe the whole game from writing to ranking and the video becomes unforgettable.

Be honest about the chicken-and-egg problem — invites need history, history needs early proposals. Address it directly around the 10-minute mark or the comments will eat you.

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	I got 113 Upwork jobs — most without sending a proposal	Lead with this
B	Stop sending Upwork proposals. Do this instead.	Punchier, more polarising
C	How to get Upwork invites without spending connects	Pure search play

Thumbnail

113 JOBS	[screenshot of your invite inbox, long scroll, many rows visible]
NO PROPOSALS
red strike through "PROPOSALS"	[your face, small, lower left, arms folded]

The stack of invites in the background is the proof. Don't blur it more than you must — the volume is the argument.

Hook (0:00-0:25)

Every Upwork channel will tell you the same thing: send more proposals, write better cover letters, buy more connects. I've been hired 113 times on this platform, over 3,000 hours, from Nigeria — and most of those jobs, I never applied for. They came to me as invites and direct messages. [cut to invite inbox scrolling] This is my invite inbox. This is not luck and it's not my follower count. It's a system, it took me two years to work out, and I'm giving you the whole thing in the next twelve minutes.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	Cold open + invite inbox proof
0:45	The reframe: Upwork is a search engine, and you're the result.
2:00	Where invites actually come from — the client-side browse flow, drawn out
3:30	Lever 1 — title as a keyword, not a job description
5:00	Lever 2 — specialised profiles as extra ranking surface
6:30	Lever 3 — the JSS and availability signals that gate you out of search
8:00	Lever 4 — category and skill tags, chosen for volume not vanity
9:30	Lever 5 — the response-time signal nobody optimises
10:30	"But I have no history yet" — the bootstrap: minimum proposals to escape proposals
12:00	What to do this week, in order
13:00	CTA → subscribe, then #5

Retention devices

- Open loop at 0:45: "lever four is the one that changed everything and it took me eleven months to find."
- Comment bait at 8:00: "tell me your current title in the comments and I'll tell you if it's searchable." Then actually reply. Early comment replies are cheap and they compound.

SEO

Target: upwork invites , how to get upwork invites , upwork without connects , upwork profile ranking . First line of the description should read: "I've been hired 113 times on Upwork, mostly through invites rather than proposals. Here's the ranking system behind it." Chapter every lever.

Shorts to cut

1. "Upwork is a search engine and you are the result" — the reframe, 40s
 2. The invite inbox scroll with a voiceover count
 3. Lever 1 alone — the title fix

4. The $700 Connects bet

Source post: "I used the first $700 I made on Upwork to buy Connects... I was broke then, and I didn't tell anyone because I was scared they'd think I was stupid."

The angle

That post works because of the shame, not the tactic. "I didn't tell anyone because I thought they'd call me stupid" is the most human line in your entire feed. Lead with it and do not sand it down.

Then earn the click with maths. The argument: freelancers price Connects against their wallet instead of against a contract. If 100 connects costs ~$15 and your average contract is [FILL], the break-even is one job in N applications — and you almost certainly clear it. Beginners treat Connects as a cost; you treat them as customer acquisition spend. Put the actual arithmetic on screen.

Pair it with the honest counterweight: this only works if your profile converts. Spending $700 on Connects with a bad profile is just donating to Upwork. That caveat is what makes the video trustworthy instead of reckless — and it's a natural push to #2.

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	I spent my first $700 on Upwork connects	Lead with this
B	I was broke and I spent all my money on connects. It worked.	Strongest emotional pull
C	Are Upwork connects worth it? I spent $700 to find out	Search-friendly

Thumbnail

[your face, left, hand over mouth / genuinely uneasy – NOT the standard shocked-face. Quieter reads more honest for this one.]

$700
ON CONNECTS

[faint: connects purchase history]

Resist the open-mouth shock face here. The post worked because it was confessional. The thumbnail should feel like a confession.

Hook (0:00-0:20)

The first real money I ever made on Upwork was seven hundred dollars. I was broke — proper broke — and I spent almost all of it buying connects. I didn't tell my friends, I didn't tell my family, because I knew exactly what they'd say: that I was stupid, that I was gambling. Here's the maths I did in my head that night, and whether I'd tell you to do the same thing.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	The confession
0:45	What $700 actually bought — real numbers [FILL]
2:00	The reframe: connects are acquisition cost, not a fee
3:30	The break-even maths, on screen
5:00	What happened over the next 90 days [FILL]
6:30	The caveat — when this is genuinely a terrible idea
8:00	What I'd tell a broke beginner today
8:45	CTA → #2 (fix the profile before you spend)

Shorts to cut

1. The confession, 40s, straight to camera, no b-roll
2. The break-even maths alone
3. "When buying connects is just donating to Upwork" — the caveat

5. If I started over with $200

Source post: "If I were a new freelancer trying to make my first $1,000 on Upwork from next year, this is exactly what I would do. I would invest about $200 in January..."

The angle

"If I started over" is one of the most reliable formats on YouTube, and yours has an edge most don't: a budget and a calendar. Not vibes — $200, 90 days, a named target.

Two decisions make or break this video. First, commit to a constraint and never break it — $200, no existing audience, no portfolio, starting from zero in Nigeria. The moment you say "well, obviously I already had clients," the format collapses.

Second, the seasonality point is your differentiator. You said January specifically. Almost nobody teaches that Upwork demand has a rhythm — new-year budgets, Q4 slowdown. That observation, backed by 3,000 hours, is a genuinely new contribution to this niche. Give it its own chapter.

Build it as a literal week-by-week plan the viewer can screenshot. Screenshot-ability drives saves, and saves drive distribution.

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	If I started Upwork today with $200, here's exactly what I'd do	Lead with this
B	The $200 plan to your first $1,000 on Upwork	Cleaner, more clickable
C	Starting Upwork from zero in 2026 (90-day plan)	Best long-tail search

Thumbnail

The arrow between two numbers is the entire concept. Green arrow, white numbers.

Hook (0:00-0:25)

Two hundred dollars. Ninety days. No portfolio, no clients, no audience, and you're sitting in Nigeria like I was. If Upwork deleted my account tonight and I had to start again tomorrow with exactly that, this is the plan I would run — week by week, and I'll tell you exactly where every dollar of the two hundred goes. And I'd start it in January, for a reason most freelancers have never thought about.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	The constraint, stated hard
0:45	Where the $200 goes — full breakdown on screen [FILL]
2:00	Why January — Upwork's demand seasonality
4:00	Weeks 1-2: profile only, zero applications
6:00	Weeks 3-6: the first-contract hunt, and what I'd accept
8:30	Weeks 7-10: rate ladder
10:30	Weeks 11-13: converting to invites [→ #3]
12:00	What I would absolutely not waste money on
13:00	CTA — screenshot the plan, tell me week one in the comments

Shorts to cut

1. "Where every dollar of the $200 goes" — 50s
2. The January seasonality point alone — this one can travel
3. "Weeks 1-2: don't send a single proposal"

6. Boosting is eating your connects

Source post: "Upwork profile boosting no dey chop connect, e dey swallow am like eba."

The angle

The pidgin line is the video. Keep it exactly as written, say it on camera, put it in the first ten seconds. It's the most distinctive sentence you've published and it costs you nothing to reuse.

The substance: boosted proposals are an auction, and most freelancers don't know they're bidding — they pick a boost amount by feel, with no model of what they're paying per impression. Your job is to make the auction legible, then give a rule for when boosting is rational. That rule roughly reduces to boost when contract value is high enough and your profile converts well enough that the extra visibility pays for itself — which means most beginners should never boost, and that's a genuinely useful, contrarian conclusion.

This is your strong-opinion video. Take the position. The comment section will be busy and that's the point.

Titles

TITLE		USE FOR
A	Upwork boosted proposals are eating your connects	Lead with this
B	Boosting no dey chop connect — e dey swallow am	Best for Nigerian audience
C	When to boost on Upwork (and when it's a waste)	Pure search

Consider running B as the title for the first 48 hours to hit your core audience, then switching to A for broader reach. Title swaps are free.

Thumbnail

BOOSTING =

[your face, right, sceptical

Second and last video allowed to use red. The draining counter should read instantly.

Hook (0:00-0:15)

Boosting no dey chop your connects. E dey swallow am like eba. [beat] And most of you are boosting without any idea what you're actually bidding on — because Upwork never tells you it's an auction. Let me show you the maths, and then tell you the only three situations where I still boost.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	The line, delivered straight
0:30	How the auction actually works
2:30	The real cost per application, worked through [FILL]
4:30	Why beginners lose this auction by definition
6:00	The three cases where I still boost
8:00	What to spend the connects on instead [→ #3]
9:00	CTA — "tell me your worst boost story"

Shorts to cut

1. The pidgin line + the maths, 35s — highest viral potential of any Short here
2. "Why beginners always lose the boost auction"
3. The three-cases rule

7. I got a beginner to Rising Talent

Source: the public thank-you from a freelancer who credited you for their Rising Talent badge.

The angle

Every other video proves you can do it. This is the only one that proves your system transfers to someone who isn't you — and that distinction is the entire difference between a creator people watch and a creator people buy from. If you ever sell coaching, audits, or a course, this video is the asset that sells it.

Structure it as a live profile teardown, not a testimonial. Testimonials are boring and suspect. Watching you rebuild a real stranger's profile on screen, with their before/after numbers attached, is compelling and self-evidently honest.

Pick someone whose starting point resembles your audience: no earnings, no badge, generic title. If they're also Nigerian, say so — the "this works from here" proof is a big part of what you're selling.

Get written permission before filming. Blur anything they ask you to.

Titles

TITLE		USE FOR
A	I fixed a beginner's Upwork profile — he got Rising Talent in [FILL] days	Lead with this
B	Rebuilding a dead Upwork profile from scratch	Evergreen teardown framing
C	He had zero jobs. We changed three things.	Curiosity-led

Thumbnail

Same split-screen grammar as #2 — that repetition is how a channel starts to look like a brand.

Hook (0:00-0:20)

This is [name] 's Upwork profile [FILL: n] weeks ago. Zero jobs, no badge, a title he copied off somebody else, and he'd been applying for months with nothing back. This is it today [reveal] . We changed three things. I recorded the whole session, and I'm going to show you all of it — including the part where I told him something he didn't want to hear.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	Before/after reveal
0:40	Who he is, where he started
1:30	Change 1 — and why , so it generalises
4:00	Change 2
6:00	Change 3 — the one he pushed back on
8:00	What happened over the following weeks, with dates
9:00	What wouldn't have worked for him
9:45	CTA — "comment your profile link, I'll pick one next month"

That CTA is the strongest comment driver on the entire list. Only make the promise if you'll keep it — and it seeds a recurring series.

Shorts to cut

1. Before/after reveal, 25s
 2. "The change he argued with me about"
 3. The single highest-impact fix, standalone

8. The free Upwork resource nobody uses

Source post: "Many freelancers still don't know Upwork has a free resource center... Bookmark it. You might learn something that saves you months of trial and error."

The angle

The weakest post on the list, so treat it accordingly: make this a Short first. If it performs, expand it. If it doesn't, you've lost twenty minutes instead of a filming day.

If you do expand it, don't just point at the resource centre — that's a link, not a video. The angle that earns a watch is "what Upwork officially tells you vs what actually works." Read their guidance on proposals or pricing and grade it honestly from 3,000 hours of experience. Where are they right? Where is their advice safe, generic, and quietly useless?

That turns a bookmark into a genuine opinion piece, and it lets you disagree with the platform on camera — which is inherently watchable.

Titles

	TITLE	USE FOR
A	Upwork tells you how to win. Most of it is wrong.	If expanding to long-form
B	The free Upwork resource almost nobody uses	Short version
C	I graded Upwork's own advice after 3,000 hours	Best of the three, if you commit

Thumbnail

[Upwork resource centre screenshot,

GRADING UPWORK'S
OWN ADVICE

The marked-up exam-paper look communicates the whole premise without reading a word.

Hook (0:00-0:15)

Upwork publishes a whole library telling you how to succeed on their platform, and almost nobody reads it. So I did — all of it — and I'm going to grade it against 3,000 hours of actually doing this. Some of it is genuinely excellent. Some of it will keep you poor.

Structure

Short version (55s): the resource exists → here's the one page worth reading → why.

Long version (6–8 min): 5 pieces of official advice, graded, with your correction on each.

Shorts to cut

1. The premise itself — this is the Short
 2. The single worst piece of official advice, standalone

9. The 12 questions I get every day

Source: your weekly Spaces — "Come with all your questions about Upwork."

The angle

This is the search workhorse of the list. Every other video is one keyword; this one is twelve. Chaptered properly, it can surface in a dozen different searches and keep earning for years.

Two rules make it work. Answer fast — 60–90 seconds each, no throat-clearing. And answer at least three of them against the consensus, because twelve agreeable answers is a video nobody finishes. Your Spaces recordings will tell you which questions genuinely recur; use the real twelve, not invented ones.

Likely candidates from your niche: connects worth it, what to charge starting out, does JSS really matter, do you need a video intro, is Upwork saturated, does location hurt you, fixed-price vs hourly, how to handle a bad client, when to raise rates, specialised profiles, how many proposals a week, what to do after 50 rejections.

Titles

TITLE		USE FOR
A	12 Upwork questions I get asked every single day	Lead with this
B	Every Upwork question you're too embarrassed to ask	Better hook, worse search
C	Upwork Q&A: 3,000 hours of answers	Weakest — avoid hand raised mid-gesture]

QUESTIONS
ANSWERED

[faint: stacked question-mark
bubbles, right edge]

12 should be the largest element on the frame. Numbered thumbnails punch above their weight on browse.

Structure

Cold open with the three most contrarian answers as a teaser (0:00–0:40), then twelve chapters of 60–90 seconds each. Chapter titles must be written as the search query, not as a topic —

"Are Upwork connects worth buying?" not "Connects."

Close with: "drop your question below, the next twelve come from the comments." That makes this a series and guarantees you a sequel with zero ideation cost.

SEO note

This video lives or dies on chapters. Write all twelve as literal questions in the description with timestamps. It's the single highest-ROI twenty minutes of admin on this entire plan.

Shorts to cut

Six of them — one per contrarian answer. This video alone feeds half a month of Shorts.

10. Earning dollars from Nigeria

Source: the spine of your whole identity — "hired 113 times... working from Nigeria."

The angle

The most underserved video on the list. Every Upwork channel is American or European, so nobody credible covers the actual logistics of earning from Nigeria — and it's the thing your core audience most needs and can least find.

Two halves. First, the emotional question: does being in Nigeria hurt you? Answer it honestly. If some clients filter by location, say so — then show that 113 hires happened anyway, and explain what actually neutralises it. Honesty here is your credibility.

Second, the boring logistics nobody else will film: identity verification, payment methods that work, withdrawal fees compared, timing, the naira conversion question, tax. Boring, high-intent, and almost zero competition. This is the video people will send to their friends.

Warn them properly about the scam ecosystem targeting Nigerian freelancers — account renting, fake agencies, "I'll use your profile" arrangements that get accounts permanently banned. Nobody with your standing has said that clearly on YouTube.

Do not give tax advice. State what you do, then say plainly that they should check with someone qualified.

The flag is not decoration — it's the targeting. It tells the exact viewer you want that this video is for them.

Hook (0:00-0:20)

Every week somebody asks me whether Upwork even works from Nigeria. Whether clients see your location and close the tab. I've done over 3,000 hours and 113 jobs from here, so let me answer it properly — including the part that is genuinely harder for us, because pretending it's all equal helps nobody.

Structure

TIME	BEAT
0:00	The question, asked honestly
0:45	Does location hurt you — the real answer
2:30	What actually neutralises it
4:30	Verification, step by step
6:00	Getting paid — options compared, real fees [FILL]
8:30	Timing, conversion, and when to hold dollars
10:00	The scams targeting Nigerian freelancers — account renting, fake agencies
12:00	Tax — what I do, and go talk to a professional
13:00	CTA

Shorts to cut

1. "Does Upwork work from Nigeria?" — 40s, straight answer
2. Withdrawal fees compared

Publishing schedule

WEEK	VIDEO	WHY HERE
1	#3 — 113 jobs, no proposals	Plants the flag. Every new subscriber should land here.
2	#1 — The $300 client	Your widest-reach story, released once there's a flagship to catch the traffic.
3	#5 — The $200 plan	Converts story viewers into system viewers.
4	#2 — $30 to Top Rated Plus	The trust video, landing when new visitors are checking you out.
5	#9 — 12 questions	Search net goes up early so it compounds all year.
6	#4 — The $700 bet	Story beat, keeps the emotional cadence.
7	#10 — From Nigeria	Core-audience gift. Expect your best comment section.
8	#6 — Boosting	Strong opinion. Slot it where engagement is already warm.
9	#7 — Student result	Proof it transfers, positioned before any offer.
10	#8 — Grading Upwork's advice	Lightest lift; a breather week you'll be grateful for.

The pattern underneath: story → system → story → system. Never two teaching videos back to back. The algorithm and the audience both want variety, and you'll burn out filming ten tutorials in a row.

One upload per week, same day, same time. Don't batch-publish — you'll starve week six.

Shorts

Three per long-form, published between uploads. That's 30 Shorts from 10 videos. Every Short ends on the same line: "full breakdown on the channel." Shorts are not the product; they're the trailer.

What to measure

After all ten, sort by impressions CTR and average view duration together:

- Low CTR, high AVD → the content is right, packaging is wrong. Retitle and re-thumbnail.
- High CTR, low AVD → the hook oversold. Tighten the first 30 seconds.
- Low on both → wrong topic. Drop it, don't rescue it.

Ten videos is roughly the point where that data means something. Before then, don't over-read it.
